Terry Allman— Residential Accommodations

Born in Santiago, Chile and raised in Mexico City, Terry Allman brings a rich and diverse life experience to her work at Franke Tobey Jones. She earned her BA from Queen’s University in Kingston, Ontario, Canada, and her career path has taken her across the globe — from the fashion industry in New York to theatre and youth education in the Midwest, and later, into the aviation industry, where she spent six years traveling the world.

Working in fashion and theatre gave Terry the opportunity to be highly creative while collaborating with people from all walks of life. Her time in aviation expanded her understanding of different cultures, belief systems, and communication styles — all of which have strengthened her ability to connect with and educate individuals and families about everything FTJ has to offer.

After many weekend visits to her mother, a resident at FTJ, Terry developed a strong connection with the community. When the opportunity to join the team came along, she embraced it — just one month before the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic. Despite the timing, the transition felt natural. “The best part of working at FTJ is getting to know our residents,” Terry says. “They have lived such fascinating lives, with incredible careers and passions. It’s a joy to learn from them — and having my mom live here too makes it even more meaningful.”

Outside of work, Terry enjoys long walks in nature, practicing yoga, exploring new ideas, challenging herself, and spending time by the beach. She’s also the proud mother of two daughters, who remain the greatest joys of her life.

“The mind of love brings peace, joy, and happiness to ourselves and others.” Thich Nhat Hanh
